On Wednesday afternoon we had a virtual workshop with Emma Reynolds author and illustrator of 'Amara and the Bats'. Emma shared her book with us and taught us so much about how wonderful and important bats are. Did you know that if it weren't for bats we wouldn't have chocolate? In the workshop Emma taught us how to draw bats and we even worked with her to create a pair of very unique characters. We all had an amazing time and it appears that Emma did too.

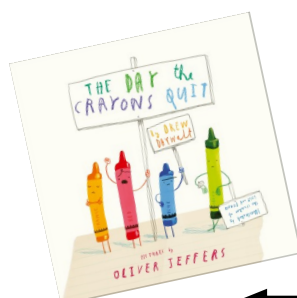

For World Book Day we explored the book 'The Boy, the Mole, the Fox and the Horse' by Charlie Mackesy. We were delighted to see our school core values shining through this beautiful book and many of us agreed with Mole's feelings about cake.

We absolutely loved looking at all of the fabulous potatoes dressed as storybook characters and thoroughly enjoyed spotting those from books we have shared together in class. What a fantastic display of our love of reading!

We all arrived at school on Tuesday morning to find that our chairs had gone on strike. They left us a letter explaining their grievances and we swiftly sprang into action writing letters to apologise for how we have treated them. Our letters did the trick and we were all delighted to see our chairs back on our return from playtime.

Our next Talk for Writing unit is based on the fabulous Oliver Jeffers book 'The Day the Crayons Quit'. If you haven't read it before you simply must follow the link to hear the best reading of the story going.
